Introduction

The equality duty

Local authorities have a general duty to have due regard to the need to eliminate discrimination and harassment; advance equality of opportunity; and foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not.

This general duty is supported by specific duties and in summary, listed public authorities in England are required to: publish information<sup>1</sup> to demonstrate compliance with the general duty, at least annually, and to prepare and publish one or more objectives, at least every four years to achieve any of the aims in the general equality duty. The information and objectives must be published in a manner that is accessible to the public.

Equality objectives

The Commission issued guidance ‘Equality objectives and the equality duty’ to help public authorities to develop effective equality objectives. This can be found at:

Performance on objectives

The Commission assessed how local authorities have performed with regard to publication of equality objectives. Overall, 354 local authorities’ websites were assessed: 202 district councils, 56 unitary authorities, 36 metropolitan boroughs, 33 London boroughs and 27 county councils.

Key findings

Out of all 354 local authorities, 301 (85%) were found to have published one or more equality objectives covering the period since the introduction of the PSED in April 2011*.

This table measures how these 301 local authorities performed against eight indicators.

Indicator	% of local authorities
One or more objectives were linked to the aims of the general duty	34.6
Equality objectives made explicit reference to one or more PCs	67.8
A rationale was provided for the choice of objectives	55.5
One or more objectives were clear about the quantity of improvement sought	31.9
One or more objectives were clear about the timeframe for improvement	57.1
One or more objectives were clear about who was responsible for delivery	40.2
One or more objectives were clear about how progress would be reported	31.9
Objectives appear to be available in alternative formats	45.8

* In some cases equality objectives that were undated were also included in the assessment where these appeared to cover the relevant timeframe. Please refer to the main report for a fuller description of the approach used.

The Commission has also published the overarching findings of its assessment, covering a range of sectors. This can be found on the Commission's website: www.equalityhumanrights.com.
